Drawing on her years of service in our profession, Kate demonstrates how the golden rule of restaurants is really the golden rule for everything. Even the smallest matters matter. That's true in the kitchen and the dining room, but it also holds in the world beyond." Katy Sparks, Chef/Owner, Katy Sparks Culinary Consulting and Tulley Road Foods "Kate is my spirit animal in the hospitality industry. One I aspire to be. She is bright and present in every moment, yet calm and introspective all the same. For years I've wondered what it is that makes her up into this incredible woman, inspired coach and marvelous manager. Now I realize it's not just a few big things that define her and the secret to it all, it's Every Little Thing That Matters!" - Christina Tosi, Chef/Owner, Milk Bar From the Back Cover We're often told 'Don't sweat the small stuff' but in customer service, author Kate Edwards reminds us that the small stuff is exactly what customers remember and gives them a reason to become regulars. It all starts with 'Hello,' which not only requires a response but also sparks a conversation and initiates a relationship between the client and the business. Maintaining a quality relationship with your customers involves paying attention to the details: things like uncomfortable chairs, dirty glass doors, and pervasive odors negatively impact the customer experience. Further, this book answers the bigger question of 'what service is' and 'why service is important' and also shares tips and tricks for making a positive impression on your guests and staff. Ultimately, customers want to know that their experience matters, and Edwards offers sound advice about how to convey this message to customers by paying attention to detail and making the little things count. Readers will receive insights, such as the author's concept of 'I Notice = I Care,' which can help transform your team from generally good into generally great service ambassadors. Hello! And Every Little Thing That Matters will inspire you to deliver service that makes a difference and that makes your business come alive.
